

Hey there! This is Renee Evans of "That's a Funny Story" podcast, and there is a secret I want to share with anyone who is thinking of getting in on the exciting world of podcasting. Getting started does not have to be scary or overwhelming. "Podcasting Made Easy: How to Launch a Successful Podcast in 8 Weeks – or Less!" with David Pasqualone can help you embark on the exciting journey that is podcasting. For me the idea of getting to host my own podcast felt exciting and a little overwhelming simultaneously. Coming up with a concept of what my show would be like was not difficult, but understanding how to get through the process of actually making and hosting a successful show felt a little like trying to navigate a new city without a map. How many wrong turns would it take to reach my destination? Enter David Pasqualone and his amazing course on how to launch a podcast.

David takes what he has learned along the way in hosting his podcast, "Remarkable People Podcast," and enthusiastically shares those tips and tricks to help you avoid many hurdles and pitfalls. The format of the class is a scheduled weekly video conference call with the members of the class over an eight-week period. Each session is used to tackle a specific part of the podcasting process. The topics range from the very basic such as coming up with a vision for your show, equipment needed, and how to record to the more advanced concerns of how to find guests and keep listeners engaged and wanting to hear more. Each week was filled with a wealth of information that piggy backed off the information from the previous class. The call closes with a call to action (aka homework) which is great because you are asked to act on what you have learned. As an add on, I elected to have scheduled coaching calls with David to be able to address any specific questions I had along the way to my launch. Being a podcaster suddenly seemed less overwhelming, and David's high energy always positive and encouraging attitude helped feed the excitement of getting started. So, if you are considering starting a podcast, in the words of David Pasqualone "Do it!" and also sign up for "Podcasting Made Easy: How to Launch a Successful Podcast in 8 Weeks – or Less!"
